

Checking Ginormous Round Bales

by Cody

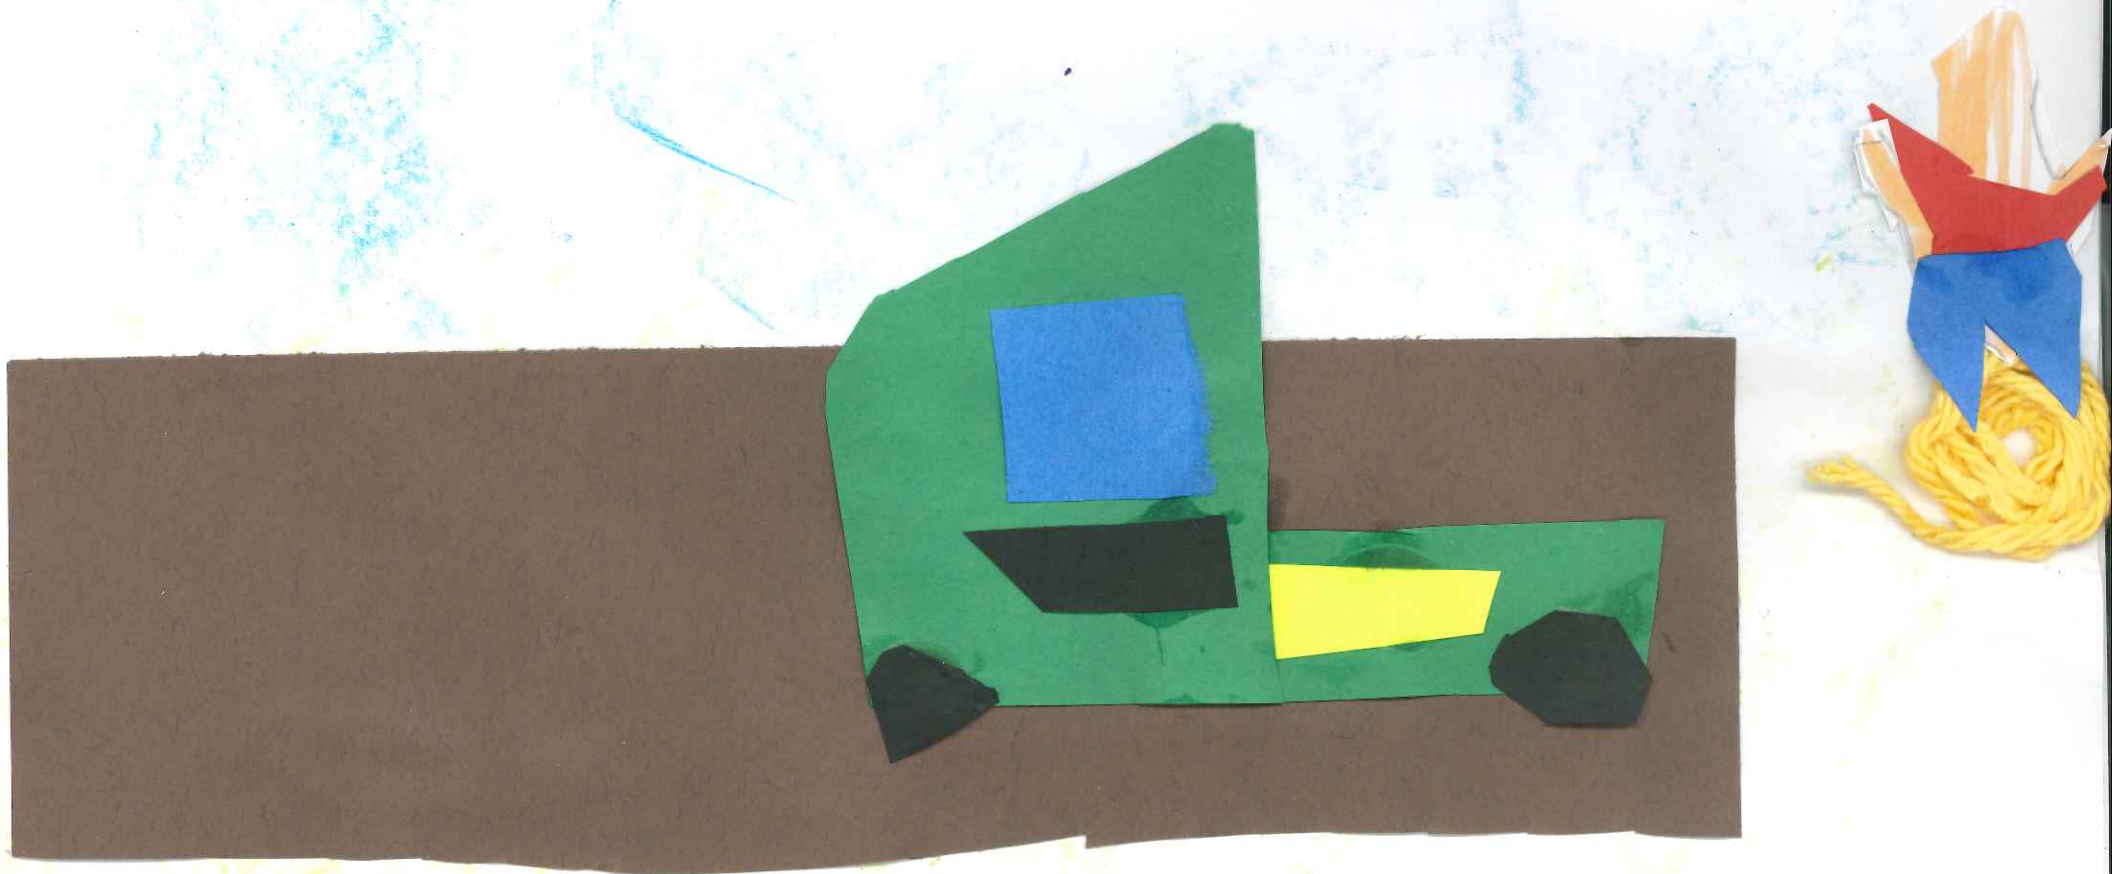

Terry and I zoomed down the road to the field to check bales. We checked them to see if they were wet or dry so the cows don't eat the wet bales. They will die early because they don't like what they are eating.

We came to a bale. We got out of the ranger. We checked two bales. We used monitors to check them. I hold a metal rod with a glass moisture reader with numbers on it. I stab it into the first bale. The monitor reads if it is wet or dry.

We drove to the next bale. I hopped out and checked it. "Good," I said. We drove to another bale. We hopped out and I got on top of one and checked it.

We put tags on the bales. They were orange or green. Orange means it was wet. Green means it was dry. We put a tag on the first bad one .

We were checking them while my dad and sister were baling in the baler. The baler baled big and little bales.

When the baylor baled the last bale we checked it.
We opened the gate and drove away. It is tiring work checking bales.
