

Once upon a time, there was an unhatched dinosaur hidden by it's mother inside a cave. It's mother was outside hunting for dinner.

A meteor hit the earth and caused an avalanche that covered the entrance of the cave. The meteor caused so much change on Earth including extinction of all living Dinosaurs.

Within hours of the meteor crashing into Earth the egg hatched by bursting into tiny bits.

The baby dinosaur was one-foot tall, looked a lot like a kangaroo, had sharp claws and wore green shoes, poka dotted pants, a black shirt and a baseball cap covered his head. His name is Steve.

Steve was safe and had plenty to eat as cave crickets and ferns covered the cave bottom from the sliver of sunlight that entered from the tiny crack at the top of the cave. Steve would often lie on his back and look out the crack up to the sky. It was maybe light for two or three hours a day. Time passed and Steve grew bigger and bigger, like a giant kangaroo! Then, a man came to the cave and discovered Steve. The man brought Steve home, fed him and taught him tricks. The human and Steve lived happily ever after.
