There lived a bunny named Hoppers. One very sunny and very lazy day, Hoppers went out to get her morning carrots. Hoppers was having a great day collecting carrots.

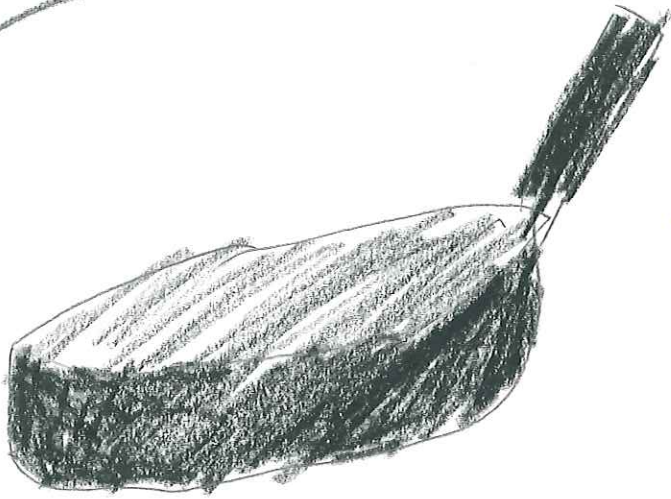

But then, Hoppers saw something strange. She wasn't too sure what it was.

Hoppers went over to grab it so she could examine it. She still couldn't figure it out, so she went to see if her friends could help.

First, she checked if her friend,
Shelly the turtle, knew what it could be.

This is a boat
for turtles who are too tired to swim.

But Hoppers thought it wasn't a boat for turtles because other creatures couldn't use it. So then she asked her cat friend, named Meowers, what she thought it could be.

This is a swimming pool for my fish friends.

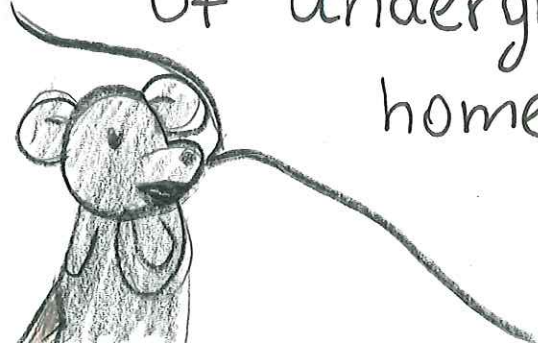

Hoppers thought it was a decent idea but she decided to ask her other friends, too. Next she asked her friend, Holey the mouse, if she knew what it could be.

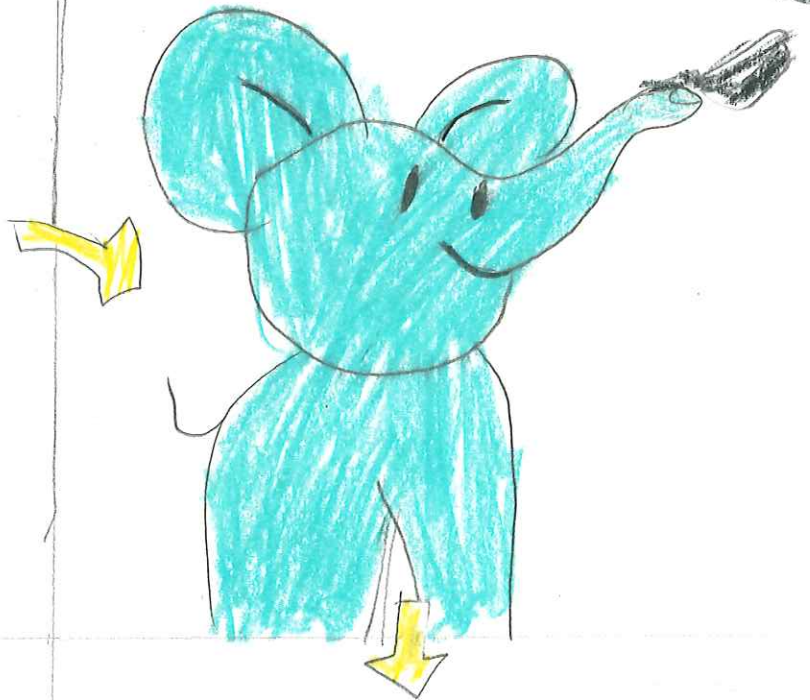

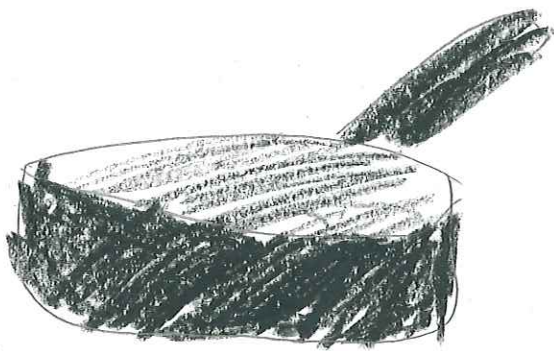

This is a shovel to dig all kinds of underground homes.

Hoppers also thought that was a good idea but she might as well check if her final friend, Ellie the elephant, knew what it could be.

This is a back scratcher. I always get itches I can't reach.

Suddenly, a bear appeared and said something that shocked every one.

There's my frying pan!
Thanks for finding it.
Bye!
