Our Hearts Are with Western North Carolina

We're all still reeling from the devastation wrought by Hurricane Helene in western North Carolina. Our hearts are with the more than 1 million North Carolina residents whose lives have been upended. We mourn those we have lost and offer our deepest condolences to their loved ones.

Thank you to the first responders, national and state agencies and local partners working together on recovery efforts. As your statewide public media organization, PBS North Carolina is doing everything it can to support their critical work and help keep everyone safe and informed.

Members of PBS North Carolina play an essential role in the lives of people across our state. Because of your support, we can share emergency briefings from the governor and the NC Emergency Operations Center on air and online, improve the speed of first responder communications and disseminate invaluable resources and information with all of North Carolina. We're grateful for your trust and partnership.

The road to recovery will bring many challenges but North Carolina is resilient. Let's continue to work together as we help those who need us the most.

—David Crabtree, PBS North Carolina's CEO and GM

Supporting Children After a Hurricane

SHARE

Hurricanes can be particularly difficult for young children. These tips from Sesame Workshop can help them feel safe and cope with their emotions.

GIVE THEM THE FACTS & OFFER COMFORT: Answer questions honestly in simple words. Reassure your child that you love them and will take care of them.

LISTEN & TALK: Encourage your child to share their feelings with words or pictures.

TAKE CARE OF YOURSELF: You can be more helpful to your children when you've attended to your own physical and emotional needs.

INSPIRE A SENSE OF HOPE: Explain that no matter what has happened, you still have each other to build a better future.

For more family resources, visit sesameworkshop.org.
